The Guernsey Jeffersonian says of Mr. ROSE, the Democratic nominee for Member of the State Board of Equalization:

"Mr. ROSE is an experienced farmer who has a full knowledge of the value of lands. He will make a most excellent member of the Board. He has been familiar with public business during the whole life and is a close observer of the affairs of men. His qualifications for the place are of the best."

The main object of Mr. MOONEY'S communication to the Bellaire Tribune appears to be to convince stockholders that their interests would be advanced by transferring $100,000 in stock to the Syndicate Ring in order that the members thereof may be enabled to re-elect themselves. Stockholders at this end of the line prefer to hold their stock for the purpose of electing an entire new set of officials who will give them a detailed statement showing where the money has gone, and what the outstanding indebtedness is, if any.

GER. WALKER is opposed to extravagant appropriations and reckless expenditures, and his vote, as a member of Congress, will be found recorded in favor of retrenchment and reform in every instance. —Athens Journal

REV. W. H. RIDER, of Woodfield, preached Sabbath evening in the M. E. Church, on the Identity of the Church. It was a brilliant and able sermon and was highly appreciated by the congregation. —Barnesville Enterprise, 19th inst.

IN RE ENGLISH was half as objectionable as the Republican papers desperately claim that he is, he would still be better than the man who had to be rejected from office in New York by the Republican administration in order to make a reform of the Civil Service possible.

The Bellaire Democrat publishes a list, three columns in length, of prominent Republicans who have declared in favor of Hancock. We had intended to publish a list of this kind, but the number of these converts has grown so enormously that we have given up that idea.

It is charged against Mr. English that in his money transactions he kept a tight grip on his own. He differs some from the Republican candidate for President. Garfield kept a tight grip on the $5,000 D. Golyer fee, but loosened it on the Credit Mobilier and Salary Grab. He was frightened out of his grip on the last two.

The Cleveland Herald says that "Wm. H. English is not growing popular as time passes." That is curious, considering that he never sold his official influence when in Congress, that he never dived his hands with Credit Mobilier and D. Golyer jobs, and was never kicked out of office in order that the office might be honestly administered. According to the Herald, it is this latter class of candidates only who are growing more popular as time passes. We rather think the Herald is color-blind.

GARFIELD is great on "a fair count." He went to New Orleans, on behalf of Mr. Hayes, to witness that interesting performance, and he assisted at it in Washington as one of the Electoral Commission. Some years previous, he called on Oakes Ames to have "a fair count" as to his interest in Credit Mobilier, made his memorandum of what was due him after paying for his stock, and took Oakes' check on the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Congress for $929. His fair counts he makes tell for himself or friends.

WHY FORNEY IS FOR HANCOCK.
Garfield's Selection Was a Blunder Worse Than a Crime.

From Forney's Progress, August 14.

Having decided to support Hancock for President of the United States, however, I find that there is another audience not quite as anxious to hear what I have to say; that one decides against me in advance. The parties to this proceeding are gentlemen who think that it is an offense for an independent Republican to do not swing in public affairs that is not set to the chorus of the Republican ring. As long as you sing in their choir, and echo their sentiments, and obey their commands, you are a saint; but if you utter a discordant note you are a traitor. I am traitor do because I do not swing the banner for General Garfield. I am traitor because I spoke well of Garfield after his nomination for President. I am glad I did. His nomination was a relief from the men who assassinated Grant at Chicago. Garfield was better than the office-holding and office-hunting politicians who, after bunting down the lion, expected to drink his blood, to feed upon his fame and to rally the party he had saved twice from ruin to their support. Garfield was better than the hypocrites who, howling civil service and holding to him, were in reality, sought the Presidency only for themselves, after having been longer in office than four times the length of one term. But I did not know General Garfield's record; I had never examined it. It was not my business to keep a list of his jobs. I have not been in the times in Washington in ten years, and I do not know what the new leaders of the Republican party have done—certainly not their secret work to help themselves. Till his nomination for President the country was almost as ignorant as myself. What it is all men know now, and I revolved from what I honestly believed it to be. General Garfield's record was not Democratic. He was brought to the bar by his own party, by the Republican press and the Republican committee of his own Congressional district, by the Republican Congress of which he was a member and by a Republican court of justice. Had this record been known at Chicago, Garfield could not have been nominated. Full information enables me to speak by the book when I assert that there was not a Republican leader of any note, equally those on the ground to play and those who came to save Grant, that did not admit, on reflection, that Garfield's selection was a blunder and that blunder was worse than a crime.

Some of the Republican papers are still denying that Col. John W. Forney supports Hancock, but if the editors of these journals would read Forney's paper, the Progress, they would discover that he is getting in some mighty vigorous work for the Democratic nominees.

OBITUARY.

DIED.—At his residence at Antioch, in this county, on Monday evening, August 16, 1880, Henry Okey, aged 64 years.

He was buried on the 18th inst., on the farm near Woodfield where he was born and raised.

The deceased at the time of his death was one of the oldest residents of the county that was born in the county. He had been confined to his bed most of the first nine months of his last year with disease of the stomach and bowels, from which he had suffered more or less ever since his confinement in Libby prison during the late war. He was followed to the place of burial by a large number of relatives and friends.

The writer visited him a number of times especially during the latter part of his illness and found him uniformly cheerful, said he would like to get well but was ready to die. He leaves to survive him a widow and five children and a large circle of relatives and many friends for I do not think he had an enemy. The writer will ever remember the kindness of the people of Antioch and vicinity for their acts of kindness to the deceased and his family.

W. O.

A GERMAN-AMERICAN SPEAKS.

Letter of Judge Stallo, of Cincinnati, to the Chairman of a Democratic Meeting in that City.

You are aware that for many years—from 1856 to 1872—I acted with the Republican party. But the very purpose for which that party was founded now demands that the man who have controlled it, and through it the Government during the last fifteen years, shall be dislodged from power. The persistent usurpation by the National Government of powers beyond its constitutional sphere, and its conversion into a tool of the party in power, and the oppression are not, in my judgment, conducive to the maintenance of its supremacy within its constitutional limits. I find it difficult to believe that the equal civil and political rights of our citizens and the purity of our elections are to be secured by placing the ballot-box under the exclusive control of the party in power—even if this control be not immediately exercised by ruffians hired for the declared purpose of suppressing all adverse majorities—or by the methods countenanced and promoted by General Garfield after the last Presidential election in Louisiana. And I am wholly unable to understand that the appointment of Madison Wells and his accomplices to office as a reward for the most infamous political crime recorded in the annals of our country, or in the chair of the Senate, afford any striking evidence of a sincere purpose to reform and purify the Government service.

Whether or not the Democratic party will make a worthy use of the opportunities which the control of the Government affords remains to be seen. For the present it is enough to say that I very much prefer its platform and its nominees to the platform and nominees of the Republicans. The Republican platform (which is, of course, to be interpreted in the light of the Republican nomination) is so far as it is concerned, a simple and audacious sneer at public morality; and the Republican candidates appear to have been chosen for the express purpose of compelling the voters of the Republic to repudiate the platform and approve the nominees which have driven so many of its members from its ranks. Or in what other sense is James A. Garfield offered to us as the representative of Republican detestation of bribery and corruption, and Chester A. Arthur as an index of Republican enthusiasm and civil service reform?

The nomination of General Hancock, however, is not only fit as a grateful recognition of his merits, but is peculiarly auspicious in view of the exigencies of the time. It is the most sagacious and the most patriotic nomination that has been made in the history of the Republic. And what is equally important, it is an augury of the restoration of peace and good will among all the citizens of this Union—the men of the South who have borne arms against the Union have not only laid them down, but they have renewed their allegiance to our common country with demonstrations of affection whose very readiness is the best proof of their sincerity. They have for years been struggling against the disabilities which have been consequent upon the complete subversion of their social and industrial system and the misfortunes entailed upon them by the war—misfortunes which certainly have not been alleviated by the practices of a majority of the men who came to the Southern States to reorganize the Government and the Republic. And I cannot conceive anything more despotic than the attempt of certain Republican politicians who aspire to the highest honors and trusts of the republic to fabricate a case against the South, and to revive the inevitable incidents to the reorganization of our Southern communities as evidence of the continued disloyalty of the whole Southern people. With the election of Hancock all this will come to a speedy end. The insane vociferation of a "solid South" will be silenced, and I am not at all surprised that at the Presidential election in 1884 we shall have two parties at the South as well as at the North, whose lines of division are no longer the lines of color or of race.
